You really are talented. Who would ever think. Ureteral stents in pediatric urolithiasis.

Ureteral stents are commonly used in the management of pediatric urolithiasis. However, the indications and choice of stents have not been well studied. This study describes our experience with ureteral stents for pediatric urolithiasis and reviews the literature. From January 1993 to December 1999, 28 children who were treated with ureteral stents for urolithiasis were reviewed. The mean age was 6.4 years (range 1 to 14), and the mean followup was 15.3 months (range 3 to 32). Stones were most commonly found in the proximal ureter (76%) in the solitary kidney (50%). The initial ureteral stents (20) consisted of silicone rubber, polyethylene, or a combination. Ureteral stents were removed in 5 patients, of whom 3 were stented with silicone rubber, 1 with polyethylene, and 1 with a combined silicone rubber and polyethylene ureteral stent. Ureteral stents were removed in 13 patients after 6.6 months. Two of the 5 patients with stents removed with the use of a wire basket were stented with a silicone rubber ureteral stent. One patient was stented with a polyethylene ureteral stent. In the 13 patients without stents removed, the mean stone size was 1.7 cm (range 0.5 to 3.0). The diagnosis of ureteral calculi was confirmed by KUB, ultrasound, or ureteral stenting and failed spontaneous stone passage. Silicone rubber stents were used in 8 patients, polyethylene stents in 3, and a combination of silicone rubber and polyethylene in 1. Renal drainage was accomplished in all 13 patients without stents. With the use of ureteral stents, stones were successfully treated in 25 of 28 (89%) patients. Complications included stent
