The self-assembly of nanoparticles at the liquid-solid interface has long been of interest because of its importance in catalysis, gas adsorption, and photonic applications. More recently, there has been an increasing interest in understanding the behavior of nanoparticles at the liquid-liquid interface because of the development of a technique to form and manipulate Langmuir-Blodgett films containing ordered nanoparticles. We report a systematic study on the self-assembly of C(60) nanoparticles at the liquid-liquid interface using a vapor-liquid equilibrium method. The film formation was studied as a function of the amount of C(60) nanoparticles and the nature of the liquid. When C(60) nanoparticles were dispersed in decalin, their mutual interaction stabilized the nanoparticles, and film formation was observed. On the other hand, when C(60) nanoparticles were dispersed in fluorinated decalin, the nanoparticles interacted with the liquid decalin, and the solvation of the liquid decalin by the nanoparticles resulted in an increase in the film formation rate and an increase in the particle coverage.
