AutoCAD LT & AutoCAD Classic are both part of AutoCAD brand but while the former is a light-weight version of the full-scale AutoCAD, the latter is a standalone standalone version of AutoCAD. While LT is a stand-alone version of AutoCAD, Classic is the standalone version of AutoCAD. AutoCAD LT & AutoCAD Classic have similarities, but one major difference is that AutoCAD LT has AutoCAD commands that make design so easy and efficient, while Classic has fewer but more sophisticated commands that are ideal for industrial design. Other differences include that Classic is more focused on creating construction drawings and publications, while LT is more design-oriented. Also, both of these versions run on Windows operating system as well as on some mobile devices and web browsers. The differences between them are described below:

I have an old email account (hotmail) where I received emails using Yahoo/Hotmail/Yahoo/etc.. mail. I want to create a new email account (using google) with the same old hotmail account I used to send my old email to. I only want to have the new gmail account have access to all the emails that I had received on the old account, and the emails I sent from it (as they will be going into gmail anyway). The problem is that when I created a new email account using google, none of the emails that I had sent using the old account are showing in the new account, and also none of the new account is showing on the old account. I tried to import all the emails from the old account to the new one using a third party email program, but in that case my old account is not seeing any of the email I sent. Is there any way to import all the emails from the old account to the new one, as there is a need to keep all the sent emails in the old account because the new one is not getting all the emails? A: If you use the Google account then you will get an option to "Sync your old account with this one" and "Create another account that you can use to access your old account". You may need to enable less secure apps if your old account is still using the old authentication. You should be able to import all the email to the new account.
