YouTube, the leading provider of video online content, was the first site which allowed users to upload and share video content on a free online basis. Over the past few years, there is no doubt that the site has become a leading force in the online media industry. More than 12 million unique visitors access YouTube each month, which is a whopping 33% of the internet population. After migrating to Google and launching a massive marketing campaign to better publicize their YouTube portal, YouTube has become much more than a simple video hosting portal. In fact, they have become part of our daily lives, such as watching online videos, where many users are conversing about a particular topic such as news, entertainment, sports or politics. YouTube videos are also being watched by a lot of people who are simply just being entertained. With the rapid increase in media and the number of viewers, the YouTube website has outgrown its current capacity to keep up with the demand. To cope with this situation, the company has introduced their new website, Google Videos. This new website offers users even more features and access to content beyond YouTube, like Google Video, Google news, Google slides, YouTube TV,

YouTube Music, YouTube Kids and YouTube Studio. YouTube wasn't the only website to experience rapid growth. Other websites have also increased their popularity due to the advantages of having numerous categories, user-friendly interfaces and of course, a lot of content. Facebook is one such website that has grown and developed at a rapid rate. The growth of this online portal can be attributed to its superior user-friendly interface, tons of content, and the ease of accessing your friends. However, Facebook is also known for its spam, privacy and content distribution issues. Although most of the people in the Western World are aware of the need to watch videos online, YouTube still remains a very popular video site in many third-world countries. Unfortunately, there are many people who are still not aware of the fact that YouTube is also the largest source of online video online content. For these people, using other video sharing websites like Facebook, Dailymotion or Vimeo.com is inevitable.
