Structural characterization of the heme pocket of the T lymphocyte receptor of a pyrrolizidine alkaloid-specific receptor TCR alpha-chain. We have cloned a T lymphocyte receptor (TCR alpha) of cytotoxic T lymphocytes specific for a pyrrolizidine alkaloid and characterized the structural changes in the heme pocket. A 22-amino acid sequence in the cytoplasmic region of the TCR alpha-chain was found to be highly conserved in many MHC-restricted TCR alpha-chains. In addition, a tyrosine residue, which is present in many other TCR alpha-chains, was replaced by tryptophan. It is likely that the TCR alpha-chains of pyrrolizidine alkaloid-specific T lymphocytes have a close structure, which could be related to the MHC restriction.

Introduction
===== The opening of private clinics in Croatia has been declared an important objective by the Croatian government. Objectives ===== The aim of this study was to determine the effect of the implementation of the "Alžir Community Primary Care" model on the health care providers' health and satisfaction, the patients' satisfaction with the services and the satisfaction of the community with the health care providers. The study also aimed to assess the impact on the level of social trust of the community towards the health care providers. Methods ===== An anonymous questionnaire was sent to all family physicians and physicians working in their private practice, after 6 and 12 months. Other questionnaires, from the Center for Health Orientation and Opinion Research (ZAVNOH), were sent to the community and people's satisfaction with the health care services in the community. Results ===== Results showed that the implementation of the medical model in a community has no significant influence on physicians' health, the patients' satisfaction with the services and the doctors' satisfaction. The implementation of the community primary care model led to increased doctors' satisfaction with patients' trust, the community and the public. Conclusion ===== The results of the study showed that "Alžir Community Primary Care" model had a significant positive effect on the level of social trust of the community towards the health care providers. Disclosure of interest
