Retouching is the process of removing or altering flaws from an image. This is usually done with a Brush or Pen, or sometimes you can use a keyboard shortcut. The latest addition to the Illustrator family is the Magic Wand tool. It's located in the Pathfinder palette. The Pixelate filter creates an outline of an image. This can be useful when you want to make an image less pixelated. While any version of Photoshop should be able to help you create the collage of images, it is worth mentioning the following addition for the new version: Layer Comps. They allow you to see how many layers or the number of layers stacked in a particular area. You can use this to decide which layers to keep or remove. A typical layer mask is made up of two parts: the foreground and the background. In the main portion of the mask, the part that is either clear or white, the background color shows through. And in the rest of the mask, the foreground color shows through. Layer Masks are a powerful and easy way to control how your image is composed. In the compositing example below, we used layer masks to create a stripe effect, then added a graphic stamp image. Experienced Photoshop users know how powerful and versatile the Layers palette is. When working on collage projects like the one below, it's vital to create a project from a blank canvas. If you are working on a smaller project, or even if you have a small-scale project, it is important to create a new document. This is because you can work and re-work your files as many times as you like without creating collateral damage to your previous work. Creating a new document is as easy as choosing File from the File menu and selecting New, or pressing Ctrl+N. Let's look at some of the Photoshop basics in working with documents. Creating a New Document

Creating a new document, or opening an existing document, is simple. Just open the File menu, select New, then select Photoshop Document. (Some folks like to launch Photoshop like this every time they start up their computer: The shortcut is the Option or Alt key followed by Ctrl+N.) Alternatively, if you're already in Photoshop, you can select File→Open and find the file you want to work on. You'll see that Photoshop offers some default names for your new document.

The Vatican Information Service is a news service, founded in the Holy See Press Office, that provides information about the Magisterium and the pastoral activities of the Holy Father and the Roman Curia...[+] Last 5 news Tuesday, February 7, 2014 VATICAN CITY, 7 FEB 2014 (VIS) - The pope spoke yesterday on the 5th anniversary of his election to the papacy, reaffirming his commitment to implementing the priorities set out in his first encyclical, "Evangelii Gaudium" (PG, 72), The pope said he would continue to follow that path and that the Church had a duty to listen to and include those on the margins of society, particularly young people and persons facing hardships. He noted the need to advance the pastoral priorities "where appropriate to changing times and conditions". The first principle of that pastoral outlook was "that evangelisation must go forward. The second is that pastoral work must be done as Jesus did, with others, for others, through others, with others. He continued: "We must be authentic people of the Church, authentic people of God, for others. Authentic in our faith, authentic in our teaching, authentic in our service to others. I want to say to the youth: 'Dear young people, this is what we want to do.'... Our families, at the expense of their own immediate needs, must help the young, who are the principal agents of change in our society, so that they can know and develop their true vocation." The pope was in France as part of his Wednesday General Audience. He was received at Toulouse airport by Bishop Michel René Luc, secretary of the Episcopal Conference of France, Monsignor Danièle Gautier, the archbishop of Paris, Monsignor Jacques Fleury, secretary of the Pontifical Council for Promoting the New Evangelisation, and Monsignor Yves Marie Marchand, secretary of the French Bishops' conference. It will be the third pastoral visit of Francis to France since his election to the papacy, following last year's trip to Lourdes and to Paris in 2012. The Pope talked about the pastoral priorities that should guide his first encyclical, "Evangelii Gaudium" ("The Joy of the Gospel"): "God's faithful love towards us, and our response of faith, hope, love and service, help us to see how we can bring a
