All EU countries have ratified the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) (Basci et al. 2017 1153). The EU climate change policy framework was included in the EU's Energy and Climate Package, published by the European Council (Council of the European Union 2017 1154). The White Paper on Climate Change Policy (European Commission 2017 1156) defined three dimensions: governance, finance and technology. The EU Climate and Energy Package was a joint proposal of the European Commission and the European Parliament. The political agreement aims to support a sustainable development to help EU Member States, in the context of the EU's Common Foreign and Security Policy, to maintain their domestic policies, often driven by domestic considerations, in order to reduce their greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions (EC 2017 1157). The European Commission, led by Justus Scheidel and Hermann Rechenberg, published a conceptual framework on ESD (Expected Social Distress), which related adaptation measures in public administrations to social media and their ability to respond (European Commission 2018 1159). The World Meteorological Organization published the Glossary of Meteorology and Climate Extremes (WMO 2018 1156).

Modelling is a critical pillar of science, providing the basic data-and-analysis infrastructure for further research and for new policy relevant insights. It is therefore not surprising that in the SCR all types of modelling are highlighted. To mitigate the risks associated with extreme climate events and to prepare for the potential long-term changes, integrated planning systems that enable multiple sectors to plan and manage landscapes and ecosystem functions in real time and in a consistent way are required. The new IPCC Assessment Report will build on the findings of existing chapters and include the land modelling community's contribution to the assessment of risks in the context of long-term change associated with land-based ecosystem functions and services that include air, water, and biosphere carbon storage, and other elements (e.g., overstory forest structure, nutrient cycling, etc.). The IPCC SCR provides updated information on extreme climate events in general and on the short- and long-term hazards they pose and the response options needed to reduce their vulnerability. Climate mitigation and adaptation strategies are assessed for regions facing high and low risk. Furthermore, the methods to measure, and hence assess, risks of extreme climate events are provided, including the assessment of risks of extreme flooding, droughts, heatwaves, and ice loss, together with the types of information essential for their assessment, such as the magnitude and severity of impacts. The state of knowledge on climate extremes and their relationship to land use-land cover is summarized in the first chapter of the SCR, including a literature review of the state of research of drought, floods, heatwaves, and snow/ice events. 5ec8ef588b
